

ANSWER TO SECY SEYBOLD'S PROHI QUESTION

By H. F. G.

The clerical call for nation-wide prohibition during the war and a period of three years thereafter does not seem to be meeting with the response from the Conservative side of the House which its trumpet tones might expect. The Conservative members are more interested in shell contracts than in the efforts of the teetotalers.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Dominion Alliance and the Ottawa committee which has the matter in hand was held in the Railway Committee room of the House of Commons one day last week. The hopes were, no doubt, that many Government supporters would drop in and lead the movement the encouragement of their presence. It was also, a vain hope. Government supporters at this stage of the game are carefully sidestepping all movements except those which look toward an extension of the life of Parliament and the necessary financial consequences attendant thereon.

All of which leads up to the fact that in an assemblage of perhaps one hundred temperance reformers, members of parliament and senators only one Conservative member put in an appearance and spoke, Hermenegilde Boulay of Rimouski, Quebec, who gave voice to his convictions in domestic legislation. Hermenegilde had put it strong to make up for the absence of his fellow members who had nothing to say on the subject. Hermenegilde, as I said before, has one opinion, many convictions. He is one of those men which history has no conviction every day and that conviction is very clear. It is his conviction that money has no value. He is the ancient Abolitionist. Hermenegilde Boulay is mighty keen on one thing and prohibition, though an old topic for some people is a comparatively new one for Hermenegilde Boulay. What I mean to say is that Hermenegilde has not been noticed in the van of the prohibition movement previous to this writing. The vote must be pretty strong down in Rimouski for Hermenegilde is now not in the van but actually in the driver's seat.

Hermenegilde has given many sons and grandsons to the service of his beloved Canada. He is the progenitor of a prodigious Quebec family, most of which has been provided by Government jobs. Hermenegilde has the right idea about these things. He knows that the apple belongs to the victor and has always acted on that principle with the result that a whole regiment of Boulays and their cousins are drawing pay from a great number. Still there must be a certain number of the family connection an hungared and wanting Government bread and as federal prohibition will doubtless entail a long list of privileged officials it looks good to Hermenegilde as a new outlet. This quite logically and reasonably Hermenegilde Boulay, who is recognized by his peers as the apple-bearer, and who will grow delicious on any subject at a minute's notice, becomes a water-bug.

Hermenegilde occupies an unusual amount of space in this article because he was the only Conservative member who was present and spoke right out in meeting. There was another Conservative member who was present who did not speak. This was Thornton of Durham who said nothing but thought a great deal. He was probably thinking of the sixty-three members of the Dominion Alliance who dropped the issue.

For the last fortnight members of Parliament have been buttonholed, so to speak by the federal prohibition movement. Secretary Seybold has written letters to each member asking where he stood and how he might be expected to vote. How to answer these letters—that was the question and Secretary Seybold was anxious to get at least an oblique answer. The Conservative members, being in a responsible position than their Liberal colleagues, naturally waited for a lead from one of their responsible statesmen. They got it from Sir George Foster, who is the original Fox Grandpa who is come to with willing answers that commit nobody to anything.

Considering Sir George's life long career on the water wagon and also considering what the water wagon did for Sir George in the way of making him a Cabinet Minister in Sir John Macdonald's government and shaping his subsequent success, Secretary Seybold naturally expected that Sir George might want to do something for the water wagon. So he wrote to Sir George and asked him to do something for the water wagon. Sir George, who was a vast, saving could be effected if the people of Canada would only stop drinking and turned the money over to the Patriotic Fund and the war debt.

Now Sir George may lack the enthusiasm of his youth for great moral causes, that is to say may have come to the conclusion that it is hard to make the world good all of a sudden and by process of law—which is a conclusion modern philosophers generally accept—but he is just as quick at the uptake as ever. He saw Mr. Seybold's point at once and gave him his answer. Not such an answer perhaps as he would have given if he had been a young man when he had just emerged from a college professorship and was a regular Woodrow Wilson for uplift, but such an answer as might be expected from a man who has been through the world's many ups and downs and covered the whole ground from Sir George's present point of view. He said that he would not do anything for the water wagon but would do something for the Patriotic Fund and the war debt.

To cut the story short Sir George Foster replied that the nation-wide prohibition was a consummation devoutly to be wished, a beautiful ideal—an ideal being something that is never reached—and that no doubt the money wasted on drink would adequately support the Patriotic Fund and pay off the national debt "if it could be collected and devoted to these purposes." I do not quote Sir George's exact words but that was the gist of it. He left the impression, so to say or the other, that the Dominion treasury would be the last place the house money would think of using as a bank. This was the cue Sir George's humble and inferior associates on the back benches were looking for and since that time Secretary Seybold's morning mail has been as leaves in Valennores. Every Government supporter has seized the opportunity to put himself on record for prohibitionist of the Sir George Foster variety. The cannot copy better man. The answers Secretary Seybold is receiving are marvels of equivocation. There is about as much hope for prohibition in them as there is about a turnip.

Meanwhile a resolution has been drafted looking to "the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor in Parliament buildings, and in the constructive period of three years thereafter." This resolution will be introduced to the House by two members of Parliament, preferably one Conservative and one Liberal member, although doubt is expressed whether a Conservative member can be found who will act as the goat.

On the fate of this resolution opinion is about evenly divided. Will it gradually drift into the bonnyard of adjourned debates? Or will it be voted on and prohibition be put on a par with the law of the land one day or the other.

LAST LEAVE

Hard as nails from the training camp, sturdy and clear of eye,
With his C.O.'s pass for a forty-eight—his last before he ships;

A thoughtful look on his sun-browned face—
It's a good-bye stroll round the dear old place,
And there may be thoughts in the mind of him that never reach his lips.

The grey stone church in the village street,
The football field and the silent pool where the giant perch would lurk;
They are all old friends when the parting comes.

At the rat-a-tat of the martial drums,
And the blare of bugles calling men away to Honor's work.

"Farewell, Jim," from the lads who stay, shyly, as children speak,
They bid a truce to their noisy fun, yet none could answer why;
But there lies a world of eloquence
In the hand clasp's lingeringly tense.
It's a mute "Good luck! Come back again," and the Last Leave minutes fly.

Mother's hug, and a stranger's sob, smiles from the lad who goes;
The young look on his brave young face paints Duty as a foe.

"I'll be sure to write when we've landed there,"

A thrown-back kiss; then a mother's prayer:
To the Lord of Hosts in Peace and War;
"God guard and bless my boy!"

—F. Fitzgerald, in the London "Chronicle."

Booth, and Miss Bell Ray, of Clareholm, and two brothers, Alex., of Guelph, Ontario and Thomas, of Hutton, Saskatchewan.

The funeral took place on Tuesday at the Clareholm cemetery, Rev. Tompkins, of Nanton, officiating.

To the Editor,
Clareholm Review,
Clareholm, Alberta.

Dear Sir—
I am writing to ask you if you will be so kind as to push my letter in your paper as I wish to thank the friends of Clareholm who so very kindly sent me a Christmas present which I receive about this morning. I am sure it is very kind of them to think of me and I appreciate it very much. We have been having very rough weather lately and have had a few exciting incidents but am thankful to say I am quite safe and in the best of health at present. Of course we are all anxious for this terrible winter to finish and I am glad that I am still able to do my little bit towards bringing it to a speedy end. I take great interest in the Canadian soldiers and am proud of the magnificent way in which they have fought in the present war. Well I must now close. Again thanking the citizens of Clareholm for their kindness and wishing you a very happy and prosperous New Year.

Yours very sincerely,
ALFRED CHAMBERLAIN,
